

The purpose of AWA

is to help members prepare for a career in agriculture and agricultural related fields, to aid women in agriculture in achieving their goals, to improve communication among women in agriculture, and for the general betterment of agriculture.

More about AWA

AWA is a professional, service and social organization affiliated with the College of Agricultural and Life Sciences at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

You don't need to be a CALS major to join AWA or live in the house.

Housing applications are available each year, starting in October.

Please contact us for a house tour or more information.

Comfortable, Community Living at a World-Class University

Escape the 'big-ness' of the UW-Madison campus

AWA has been called a home-away-from-home for up to 26 women residents each year since 1994. The organization built the house in an effort to provide affordable housing and a welcoming community for agriculturally-minded female students.

AWA continues to be a place of refuge and connection for students, while keeping them close to campus, classes, collegiate sports, and everything else UW-Madison has to offer. Plus, AWA's cooperative-style living builds life skills and teamwork among house members.

Everything a girl could ask for!

- Spacious triple, double and single rooms, arranged in living 'pods,' complete with bathroom, lounge and kitchenette.
- Home-cooked dinner, served Monday through Thursday.
- Food for meals and snacks provided.
- Private lot and street parking available.
- High-speed internet in each room.
- Private phone line to each room.
- No charge for use of washer and dryer.
- Rent is competitive with other housing options around campus. A quarterly food bill covers groceries, utilities and supplies.

- Live-in student house manager and house steward organize cleaning and cooking crews, along with maintenance.
- Quiet study areas.
- 23 to 25 (soon-to-be) friends!
